Kevin Dorsey, MD, PhD

Internal Medicine/Rheumatology

Dean Emeritus – Southern Illinois University College of Medicine

Former Interim President – Southern Illinois System

Dr. J. Kevin Dorsey graduated cum laude with a B.S. in Chemistry from Fairfield University. After completing a PhD in biochemistry at the University of Wisconsin in 1968, Dr. Dorsey served a two-year term in the US Army and completed a postdoctoral fellowship in cell biology at Johns Hopkins University. He then became one of the founding faculty members of the Southern Illinois University School of Medicine in 1973. Dr. Dorsey went on to pursue an MD degree and graduated from the SIU School of Medicine in 1978. He completed an internal medicine residency and rheumatology fellowship at the University of Iowa before returning to Illinois. Dr. Dorsey practiced rheumatology at the Carbondale Clinic for 15 years while he continued his efforts as a medical educator by teaching freshman medical students. In 2001, he became the third dean of SIU School of Medicine, a position he served until December 2015.

As the Dean Emeritus, Dr. Dorsey continues to teach students internal medicine, rheumatology, and physical examination skills as well as promote empathy and clinical reasoning in the culture of healthcare institutions. Dr. Dorsey began a 1-year term as interim president of the Southern Illinois University system in July 2018. His current research focuses on physician professional behavior and the nature of the supervisor-trainee relationship as it relates to entrustment in the care of patients.

Dr. Dorsey has received a number of honors, including SIU SOM Most Outstanding Clinical Teacher, John Temple Spirituality in Medicine Curricular award, and Southern Illinois Medical Association Favorite Son award. In 2016, he received the SIU School of Medicine's Annual Outstanding Educator Award by the Academy for Scholarship in Education, subsequently renamed the "J. Kevin Dorsey Outstanding Educator Award" in recognition of accomplishments in education.
